

Land Economics

Applied Research on Environmental Resources

Volume 94

Number 3

August 2018

Published by the University of Wisconsin Press

Guidelines For Manuscript Submission

Land Economics requires that authors submit all manuscripts online. The link to our submissions site is <http://le.msubmit.net>.

As of January 1, 2018, Land Economics charges a submission fee of $100 to consider initial submissions. (No fee is charged for invited revisions.) This fee is nonrefundable and does not guarantee that your manuscript will be sent to outside reviewers; we reject over half of all manuscripts without sending them to outside reviewers. Researchers for whom the submission fee would cause a significant economic hardship may request a waiver.

Submissions should conform to the journal's purpose: Land Economics is primarily interested in the policy implications of the work we publish, and therefore it is important that all papers have a strong empirical component. It is impossible to derive coherent policy conclusions from purely axiomatic models because such models lack connection to empirical reality. With that in mind, papers lacking empirical content are discouraged.

It is the policy of Land Economics to publish papers only on the condition that the data used in the analysis are clearly and precisely documented, readily available to any researcher for purposes of replication, and sufficiently detailed in the specifics of computations to permit replication. Appearance of an article in Land Economics constitutes evidence that authors understand these conditions and will abide by the stated requirements.

From the Editor

In July of this year I began my tenure as editor of Land Economics, taking over from Dan Bromley after his more than 40 years of leading the journal. I am excited by this opportunity and grateful to inherit the legacy of nearly a century of scholarship.

Transitions are a time for looking back and looking ahead. To begin I would like to thank Dan for his long and dedicated service to the journal. In their 1974 letter announcing the last editorial transition, Dan and his coeditor, Charles Cicchetti, wrote that Land Economics is “a scholarly journal devoted to land. . . . We especially seek to publish articles which either address the determinants and consequences of economic activity on the value and use of land, or the contribution of natural and environmental resources to economic activity.” This sentiment was expressed around the time of the birth of environmental economics as a distinct field. It is noteworthy because their letter foreshadowed the evolution of Land Economics into its current form, reaffirming its historical emphasis on place-based institutional detail and real-world empirics, while broadening its topical coverage to serve the needs of the growing field of environmental economics. Thanks to Dan’s vision and leadership, Land Economics today is a vibrant outlet for scholarly communication on a wide range of environmental and resource economics topics.

As I begin my term, my goal is to maintain the journal’s emphasis on empirical and policy-relevant research in the field, while continuing to expand its readership and author community to include broader swaths of researchers in the profession. I do not anticipate major changes in how the journal is run; I am fortunate to have inherited a capable and dedicated team that has done an excellent job of shepherding Land Economics in recent times. Likewise, I do not expect to make major changes in editorial policy. Instead, my early emphasis will be on increasing the journal’s visibility, circulation, and overall impact—tasks for which I will call on current authors, readers, and reviewers for assistance and suggestions.

I have shared elsewhere my views on effective scholarly communication (Phaneuf 2011), and my general views of the current research needs of the field (Phaneuf and Requate 2016), and so will not repeat them in detail here. I will note, however, that a decade of editing at JEEM and JAERE has taught me that while an editor can never hope to please everyone all the time, he or she can seek to foster communication that is clear and respectful, so that there is agreement on the legitimacy of the publication process, even if parties disagree on the outcome. I encourage all journal participants to strive for this ideal.

I look forward to serving the profession as the new editor of Land Economics. Please feel free to contact me with any thoughts, comments, or questions.

Daniel J. Phaneuf
Madison, Wisconsin

References

- Bromely, Daniel W., and Charles Cicchetti. 1974. “An Open Letter from the New Editors.” Land Economics 50 (4): iii.
- Phaneuf, Daniel J. 2011. “Editorial.” Journal of Environmental Economics and Management 62 (1): vii–viii.
- Phaneuf, Daniel J., and Till Requate. 2016. “Final Thoughts.” In A Course in Environmental Economics: Theory, Policy, and Practice, Ch. 22. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.

If you value Land Economics, please let your librarian know!

In this time of tightening budgets, some libraries are not renewing journal subscriptions, unless they hear from YOU. If you find the articles you read in Land Economics valuable, please take a moment to tell your library by filling out the library recommendation form, below or online at:

<http://uwpress.wisc.edu/journals/pdfs/lib-form.pdf>

I recommend that the library subscribe to Land Economics:

ISSN 0023-7639, e-ISSN 1543-8325, 4/yr

Edited by Daniel W. Bromley, University of Wisconsin–Madison

To subscribe visit <http://uwpress.wisc.edu/journals/> or contact your subscription agency.

PROFESSOR

DEPARTMENT

DATE

SIGNATURE

Reason for acquisition:

- This journal is an essential resource for myself and my colleagues
- I refer my students to this journal
- I publish/intend to publish articles within this journal
- Other _____

University of Wisconsin Press

1930 Monroe Street, 3rd Floor, Madison, WI 53711-2059 U.S.A.

P: 608 263-0668 or 608 263-0654 F: 608 263-1173 or (U.S. only) 800 258-3632 journals@uwpress.wisc.edu • <http://uwpress.wisc.edu/journals/>